That was the verdict of nearly 9,000 enthusiastic men and women who saw the racing season opened at the magnificent track in Nassau County. The law, as interpreted by the courts and enforced by Sheriff Foster and his deputies, permitted a certain amount of oral betting between individuals, with absolutely no display of cash at any time and no recording of transactions, as far as could having reached that happy land, I sought the baseball park. They charged me nothing at the gate, but led me blithely in, and murmured, as I took my seat: "The home team's sure to win." A winged fan beside me sat, within the grand stand's shade, consuming pearly peanuts and ambrosial lemonade. I asked him why the shining hosts all wore such happy grins. "In heaven here," the fan replied, "the home team always wins." The game was nicely under way when I fell out of bed, and busted nearly all my slats, and fairly spoiled my head; forgetting I was back on earth, I cried:
